INTRODUCTORY

Even if it were possible to write the progress of Indianapolis one day and to print it the next, the history would not be adequate. For the forward movement has taken fast hold on the community, and every minute marks an advance.

No medium records this history so nearly up to date as the Indianapolis City Directory, for perforce, it must follow closely to render dependable service to its thousands of patrons. And in this volume for 1911, the publishers believe the public will find even greater satisfaction than in those which have preceded.

The census taken by the government last year gave Indianapolis a population of 233,650. This figure was gratifying, for it showed a gain of 38.1 per cent during the last ten years, while New York city, the country's metropolis, boasted a gain of only 38.7 per cent.

And yet we are even a greater city than these figures indicate. Of necessity the government must enforce rigid restrictions in the census-taking. This volume therefore presents several thousand names that were omitted in the census count for Indianapolis—employes in this city with legal residences at other points, but to all intents and purposes citizens of Indianapolis; residents of the new additions just outside the city's boundaries, but active in the business and social life of the community. And it includes the names of several thousand new citizens who have removed to Indianapolis since the count seven months ago.

This Directory contains 102,136 names, which indicates a total population of 255,340, for experience shows that there are two and one-half inhabitants to each name. The publishers believe that this is a conservative estimate of the population of this community at the present time.

Population is not the only growth in Indianapolis, however. The pages of this volume present evidence of general civic and commercial advancement. Many new industries are listed. New business blocks, new apartment houses, new theaters, new school buildings, new churches—all these mean a progress more important to a municipality than mere numbers of inhabitants.

The general information found herein is varied and complete. It is only the by-product of the Directory proper, to be sure, for the chief purpose is to present accurate lists of names and addresses. Careful and painstaking effort has been expended in gathering and classifying information, and the publishers desire to express appreciation of the efforts of those who have co-operated with the representatives of the company.

Patrons of this company are invited to make use of the Directory Library maintained at the offices, 320-324 American Central Life Building, where the directories of all the larger cities will be found. These volumes are received in exchange for the copies of the Indianapolis Directory, which occupies a place in similar libraries over the country, giving constant and favorable publicity to Indianapolis.

The Commercial Club

Commercial Club Building, 28 South Meridian Street

A COMMERCIAL AND CIVIC ORGANIZATION with a membership of 2,000, composed of the leading business and professional men of the city, which stands for the betterment of Indianapolis. Its mission is to give encouragement in a public way to every branch of manufacture and trade; to lend its influence in shaping legislation in the interest of Indianapolis and the State at large; to advertise the city and exploit its many advantages as a manufacturing center and place of residence. Information relative to Indianapolis will be furnished on application to

ROBERT G. McCLURE, Secretary, 603 Commercial Club Building

INDIANAPOLIS of TO-DAY

AS VIEWED BY THE COMMERCIAL CLUB

There are twelve public parks, covering 1,700 acres.

Fire protection and water supply are of the very best.

Indianapolis is the fifth largest publishing city in America.

Indianapolis is noted for its freedom from labor strikes and disturbances.

It has two hundred churches, with a membership of seventy-five thousand.

A Belt Railroad surrounds the city, expediting shipments and furnishing factory sites.

All freight depots are located in the heart of the city, within a radius of four squares.

Indianapolis is the sixth city in the United States as a pork and beef packing house center.

Indianapolis has an area of 30.77 square miles, the elevation above sea-level varying from 714 to 832 feet.

One-fourth of the population of the United States is within a radius of three hundred miles of Indianapolis.

Our two-million-dollar United States Court House and Post Office is the most modern and complete in America.

Four hundred and eighty-five steam and electric passenger trains enter our Union Station and Traction Terminal daily.

Indianapolis has the largest and most imposing monument ever erected by any government in honor of its soldier dead.

We have at the present time 168 miles of sewers, with sanitary conditions the best; 125 miles of paved streets, and 255 miles of water mains.

Forty-five hotels afford accommodations to all visitors, even during the many conventions that are held here, and which are of such frequency as to average one for each day in the year.

There is no better labor market in the world. There are 45,500 people employed in the city by the manufacturing industries. Of this number fully 30,000 may be called skilled mechanics.

Indianapolis has one hundred and fifty-five miles of electric street railroad, under one system (at a four-cent fare, with transfer), a greater mileage in proportion to the population than that of any other city.

The honor of being the largest inland city in the country still rests with Indianapolis. Situated within thirty-five miles of the center of population, and possessing a most wonderful system of steam and electric railroads, it has a location of unsurpassed advantage.

Indianapolis is recognized by educators as having a model school system. Visitors come to our city daily to investigate its merits. We have sixty-five public schools, two high schools (one academic and one manual training), four colleges and academies, a large central library, with nine branch stations.

This city is the greatest interurban center in the world, all the lines terminating in the magnificent Traction Terminal Station, which is the only exclusive station for electric lines in the world. By means of steam and trolley transportation one and one-half million people are within two hours' ride of Indianapolis.

Indianapolis has seven national banks, with an aggregate capital of over six million dollars, and surplus and undivided profits of over three million. Three of the national banks have a capital of $1,000,000 each, and one of $2,000,000. The total resources of the national banks and trust companies aggregate $70,000,000.

The largest industries of Indianapolis are engine and boiler shops, mill machinery and saw manufactories, structural iron and bridge works, foundries and machine shops, carriage and automobile manufactories, beef and pork packing houses, cotton and woolen mills. However, we can claim that no city, possibly in the world, has a larger variety of industries.

The census shows that the city within her corporate limits has a population of less than 250,000 people, but the network of steam and electric roads centering in Indianapolis, offering very low passenger rates, and quick, convenient transportation, together with the attractive features of the retail stores themselves, make the city the principal shopping center for a territory inhabited by two million people.

Indianapolis has long been known as the city of homes. A relatively greater number of residents own their homes than in almost any other American city. There is almost a total absence of the foreign floating element, and of the disturbances frequently found in the various seaboard and interior ports. This is not a closely built city, and with its wide streets and alleys, the various houses receive an unusual amount of air and sunshine.

Indianapolis is within fifty miles of the most extensive coal fields in America, and is the center of the Indiana coal trade, which is daily growing into larger volume. The main offices of nearly all the Indiana coal mines are located at Indianapolis, and the contracts for the production of coal are made here. Steam coal for factory use is laid down at the plant of the consumer at about $1.25 per ton, a price which is not duplicated, quality considered, by any other city of our class.

Indianapolis made wonderful progress in 1910 in a commercial way. Many new industries were established, both in manufacturing and mercantile lines. There are to-day fully 1,200 manufacturing plants employing five or more persons—some of them giving employment to 2,000 persons. At the present time "The Greater Indianapolis Industrial Association," organized by members of the Commercial Club and other commercial bodies, is engaged in a campaign for the sale of lots in establishing an "industrial city" adjoining Indianapolis on the southwest, whereby they expect to bring new factories to this city employing 10,000 people. "Beech Grove," the industrial center east of the city, is already successfully launched. Thus it will be seen that the city of Indianapolis is offering every possible facility for manufacturing industries.

STREET AND AVENUE GUIDE

(Copyright 1911)

THE Street Directory is an alphabetical arrangement of the names of the Streets and Avenues of the city. By the decimal system of numbering houses adopted in this city, one hundred numbers are allotted to each square. On streets running north and south the numbering begins at Washington street. The streets running east and west are numbered East and West from Meridian street. All other streets not commencing at either of the above points are numbered in accordance with this system. The names and numbers of intersecting streets and avenues are given in the order in which they occur, which enables one to tell between what streets a certain number is. For instance, you have 820 Harlan street: by reference to the Street Directory, you find 800 at Lexington av. and 900 at Pleasant street; consequently, the place you wish to find is between Lexington av. and Pleasant street.

The marginal letters of the alphabet refer to the nearest street car line. For example, you wish to go to 520 E. Sixteenth: you refer to Sixteenth street in the Street Directory and find that 520 would be between Central av. and Park av. and the letter "B" in the margin, then by referring to the street railway lines you find the letter "B" is the Central av. line, which is the nearest car.
